Title: Gender-Based Violence in Kosovo: Prevalence, Forms, and Consequences

Gender-based violence is a significant issue affecting women's lives globally, including in Kosovo. This paper provides a comprehensive overview of the prevalence, forms, and consequences of gender-based violence in Kosovo. The study is based on a systematic review of the available literature on gender-based violence in the region. It includes both qualitative and quantitative studies conducted over the past decade. The study reveals that gender-based violence is prevalent in Kosovo, with significant variations across different regions and communities. The most common forms of violence include domestic violence, sexual violence, and human trafficking. The consequences of gender-based violence are severe and include physical injuries, mental health problems, and social isolation. The study highlights the need for continued efforts to address gender-based violence in the country. The government, civil society, and international organizations must work together to implement comprehensive policies and programs to prevent and respond to gender-based violence. These efforts should include increasing awareness and education, providing support services for survivors, and strengthening legal frameworks and law enforcement.
